Published notices

- A provincial nomination does NOT itself grant permission to work in Canada. A separate work permit application is required to work while the PR application is processed.
- Faster work permit processing available for physicians/healthcare specialists (clinical lab medicine, surgery, general practice/family medicine) with a full-time offer + a support letter from the nominating province/territory.
- Available if applicant's existing work permit is about to expire while PR application is still processing.
- An immigration representative cannot open a portal account on the applicant's behalf, sign the application electronically, or log in using the applicant's credentials. They can fill forms and communicate via their own account.

No score threshold or invitation cut-off is shown here: IRCC publishes the result of each round.

No implementation date confirmed as of mid-2026.

Provincial and territorial programs

Programs currently covered in LogiVisa's verified data

This section covers the Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta nominee streams and the federal stage for Quebec-selected workers. It is not a complete list of Canada's provincial and territorial programs: the other provinces and territories are not included in the current dataset. A program missing from this section may exist; check the province or territory's own immigration website.
Each province and territory runs its own nominee streams, with its own criteria, scoring model and occupation policy. They are listed as each publishes them, with the date checked. A nomination is a provincial decision; the permanent residence application is then decided by IRCC. “Enhanced” streams are linked to Express Entry and the published CRS addition for a nomination is 600.
